NEW YORK: Gainesville, FL playwright Michael Presley Bobbitt debuts his new original play Sunset Village at a renown off-Broadway theater in the East Village of New York City, under the direction of Tom Miller. Set in an infamously wild Florida retirement community (you know the one), Sunset Village explores the swinging lifestyles of a senior-citizen never-never land where venereal disease rates are the highest in the nation, and everyone is trying to outrun the sunset.

Sunset Village is presented as part of Broadway Bound Theatre Festival 2018. Come out and play, New York! Affordable theatre is alive, well and living in NYC's eclectic and electric East Village. Broadway Bound takes a fresh approach to the theatre festival model as it mentors the continent's brightest playwrights on successful self-production.

For playwrights, participating in BBTF is a balance between seeing their play not only as a work of art, but as a business venture and actively participating in the community, with the complete and comprehensive support of the festival management team. The result is a top-quality production of their premiere work in NYC's only curated festival.

The 2018 season will see a fresh, diverse and relevant cross section of theatre relevant to the modern audience.

The New York Times pick of top 15 festivals to see Broadway Bound runs August 4-24 with multiple performances daily.
